

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA OF ACTIVE ARMY ARTILLERY REGIMENTS

Hallmarks of Army Tradition

Following are Distinctive Insignia of Artillery regiments of the active U. S. Army included in the Combat Arms Regimental System. Colorful Artillery uniforms of the past, reproduced from a new series of prints prepared for the Office of the Chief of Military History, are also depicted here.

This presentation is second of a series. Insignia of Armor regiments appeared in the February 1964 Army Information Digest. Infantry will be featured in a future issue.

Distinctive Insignia

At a frontier fort on the Ohio River in 1786, a captain of artillery (left foreground) wears a cocked hat with the national cockade and an epaulette on his right shoulder.

This 1805 scene of construction work near West Point, New York, includes an artillery cadet in the uniform of the period (left foreground).

Attired in the uniform worn on the northern frontier in 1812, a sergeant of the light artillery regiment appears at right. In background is a trumpeter of the light artillery and a company of artillerymen.

The Artillery School of Practice appears as it did in 1827. In the center foreground is a captain of artillery; in background is an artillery detachment headed by company musicians.
